Kaleb Joseph grew up in a challenging environment, using basketball as an escape while facing instability at home. He earned a Division I scholarship in eighth grade and became a top recruit, but the pressure at Syracuse University led to anxiety, stress, and eventually addiction. After hitting rock bottom, he found support from former NBA players in recovery and turned his pain into purpose. Now, through his Self Help Tour, he helps athletes develop emotional intelligence, resilience, and self-awareness to navigate challenges on and off the court.

"Kaleb is a perfect modern spokesperson for today's youth. He effortlessly connects with the entire crowd and his message is aimed at the heart of what students are struggling with." Rory Gentile, English Teacher and Baseball Coach
